

Week #15 – Investing Speculating with Options and Futures

Happy Earth Day, Everyone! Here we are at the beginning of week #15 and the semester is quickly coming to a close. With bonds and exam #4 behind us, it is time to get serious about learning about options, chapter 15, and futures, chapter 14. (Notice that I did not say anything about actually investing in options and futures. They are not investments; they are speculations. And we all know that speculation is just a fancy term for gambling, right? Remember: Instruction about syphilis is not an instruction to acquire syphilis. The same is true for options and futures. Just because you need to know and understand these “weapons of mass financial destruction”¹ does not mean you should ever throw any money at them. Okay, this is the end of my personal rant. My apologies.)

The chapter 10 and chapter 18 assignments are due on Saturday. (Note: The chapter 18 assignment is the easiest 5 points you will earn all semester long. Take the ten minutes needed to do it, okay?) Please submit any late assignments that you have as soon as possible. Also, just in case you did not know, Blackboard allows the instructor to add feedback comments for your assignments. Please take a look at them.

Don't Give Up! Never Give Up!

Sincerely,

Frank Paiano

P.S. Chapter 10 and 18 assignments are due this Saturday. Get started on learning about options and futures. (But don't ever speculate in options and futures, okay?) The next exam is the final during the last week of the semester.

¹ “Weapons of Mass Financial Destruction” was coined by Warren Buffet to describe his thoughts on derivatives. He coined this term, by the way, before the financial world was rocked by the mortgage meltdown in 2008.
